PROLOGUE

In the present era, universal trend has been shifted from synthetic to herbal medicine. As per WHO, there are three kinds of herbal medicines: raw plant material, processed plant material and medicinal herbal products. Herbal medicines are complex chemical mixtures obtained from a plant which is widely used in health-care in both developed and developing countries. High-performance thin layer chromatography (HPTLC) is one of the sophisticated instrumental techniques for qualitative and quantitative analysis used extensively in the Pharmaceutical & allied industry. It can serve as a tool for identification, authentication and quality control of herbal medicines.
